In 1943, during the Second World War, France established the Compulsory Work Service (STO). Almost immediately, resistance groups known as "maquis" began forming across the country to oppose and evade the STO. Remote and hard-to-reach locations were needed to shelter and hide the résistants. The Plateau des Glières became one of these iconic sites, thanks to its geography: close to Annecy, surrounded by steep cliffs, and dotted with alpine farms. Many resistance fighters decided to take refuge there during the winter of 1943-1944. In March 1944, the end of the maquis unfortunately came with violent battles, which are still commemorated today.

Nestled in the heart of Reblochon country and offering breathtaking views of Lake Annecy and Mont Blanc, it is now a prime destination for hiking. The final night of the trip is spent at the perched Parmelan refuge, where you'll enjoy a panoramic view stretching all the way to the Jura mountains. A perfect getaway for an extended weekend in the Haute-Savoie mountains!

You will love

- A mountain range that has preserved its authentic alpine spirit
- A land shaped by history
- A landscape alternating between alpine pastures and remote forests
- Stunning views over Lake Annecy and Mont Blanc

PAS DU ROC - PLATEAU DES GLIERES

The hike begins with the famous Pas du Roc, lined with information panels about the local resistance, and then reaches Champ-Laitier, overlooked by Sous-Dine Mountain, which has witnessed many battles. We cross Frêtes Mountain to reach the iconic site of the Savoyard resistance, the Glières Plateau. The motto "live free or die" echoes through the valley, dominated by the large white memorial.

This is an alpine pasture near Montiévray, the place that sealed the fate of the Resistance fighters on March 26, 1944. Return via the GR de Pays Massif de Tournette et Aravis trail, passing by the Notre-Dame des Neiges chapel. Second night on the Glières plateau, resting place of Tom Morel, leader of the Haute-Savoie Resistance.
